REPORT OF THE MANAGER TO THE UNITHOLDERS

DA CHENG CHINA BALANCED FUND (A SUB-FUND OF DCI INVESTMENT TRUST)

Fund Performance

Da Cheng China Balanced Fund (the "Sub-Fund") seeks to provide long-term growth of capital and income. As of 30 June 2023, the Sub-Fund aggregates a total asset size of approximately RMB 5,746,638,236.

Market Overview

In spite of the volatility, A-shares were generally up in 2023H1 as small and mid caps outperformed. In January 2023, the market extended the upward trend that started at the end of October 2022, supported by higher expectations of economic recovery after the pandemic policy was optimized, and the easing of liquidity after overseas inflation slowed down with a further boost provided by the investment boom in artificial intelligence catalysed by ChatGPT. From February to March, the market turned volatile as the factors driving the market upward earlier had weakened. China's economy recovered at a slower pace just as expectations of interest rate hikes by the Fed heightened, and when coupled with the US banking crisis, these events dampened the risk appetite of global markets. From mid to late April, the market began to retreat with the decline affected by a downward trend in domestic economic data as compared to previous months, highlighting the contradiction between strong expectations and weak reality, and basic expectations were revised down. At the same time, the US debt ceiling crisis and geopolitical tensions further impacted the global liquidity environment and risk appetites. When June began, the market predicted the economy to be at its bottom, and interpreted the unexpected interest rate reduction by the central bank as a signal that policies promoting stable growth would be key. As such, A-shares stabilized and rebounded. In H1 2023, the style that favoured small and mid-caps outperformed large caps, with SSE 50 down by 5.43% while CSI 500 was up by 2.29%. Sector performance was driven by both artificial intelligence and talks of a valuation system with Chinese characteristics. Significant growth was reported for TMT, construction, and financial sectors while performance was weaker for the pro-cyclical of real estate and resources sectors.

Slower recovery momentum for the economy in 2023H1, and A-share profits may have hit a nadir. Basically, a weaker economic recovery trend was seen in 2023H1, and the impetus for domestic demand to improve was somewhat lacking. Specifically, since April, the PMI once again dipped below the boom-bust line, and the continual decline in CPI and PPI triggered concerns about "deflation" in the market. From January to May, year-on-year growth of total retail sales of consumer goods was 9.3%, and consumption played a leading role in propping up the demand recovery. The area of commercial housing sold decreased by 0.9% year-on-year as the real estate sector remained weak. In May, year-on-year growth of exports turned negative but there was a possibility of an increase in external demand. The weak economic recovery was reflected in the profits of A-shares. In the first quarter, the net profit attributable to the parent company of A-shares increased by 1.4% year-on-year and the main contributor to this increase was the financial sector. However, the net profit attributable to the parent company of non-financial listed companies decreased by 5.9% year-on-year, and their profits continued to dip. In terms of liquidity, there was reasonable and ample macro liquidity generally, with M2 growth maintaining at a high level in 2023H1. In June, the central bank implemented an interest rate cut to further relax the liquidity.

Outlook

Policy support to drive economic recovery in 2023H2, and A-share profits may embark on an upward cycle with the focus on consumption and technology. In terms of outlook for the economy in 2023H2, China's economy currently does not have strong endogenous drivers, and urgently needs a push from policies that promote stable growth. On June 16th, the China's State Council studied a series of policy measures to promote a sustained recovery of the economy, and these policies may be implemented at the meeting of the Political Bureau in July. Consumption and investment are likely to be the upcoming focuses for policymakers. Next, the recent interest rate cuts by the central bank fully demonstrated the intent to use monetary policy for countercyclical adjustments. The more relaxed monetary policy is likely to continue for the second half of 2023 with an emphasis on boosting corporate confidence, directing excess savings to flow back into the real economy, and encouraging the dynamic recovery of the economy. In addition, fiscal policies are likely to further enhance efficiency, or invest in infrastructure and alleviate the pressure on local debts. As for corporate profits, at the macro level, the current inventory cycle which started from around end of Q3/beginning of Q4 of 2019 may bottom out in 2023Q3. At the same time, there are hopes that PPI may stabilize and rebound with the economic recovery, giving companies greater flexibility in profits. At the micro level, as the bottom in A-share profits gradually emerges, Q2 profit growth is expected to rebound. Growth in A-share profits for 2023 is projected to be about 10%. As profits improve in the subsequent quarters, there is more room for A-shares to restore profitability levels in 2023H2. However, it should be noted that efforts are needed to increase the willingness to spend by residents, corporate spending and the willingness to invest. At the same time, risk events such as local government debt pressure, international political tensions, and overseas monetary policy tightening may also create some uncertainties regarding the recovery momentum of China's economy. In terms of the outlook for A-shares in 2023H2, both fundamentals and capital are expected to improve, and these should drive the stock market upward. As the economy is likely to continue its weak recovery trend in the second half of the year, the dominant style will be one that favours growth stocks with greater demand recovery elasticity like TMT, and these stocks are expected to perform better. It will be worthwhile to examine the consumer and technology sectors in sector allocation. For the consumer sector, as China's economy is now still on the recovery track, and this will promote a rebound in residents' incomes and their willingness to spend in the second half of the year, effectively driving consumer demand. Moreover, recent high-level meetings have successively reiterated the need to optimize the consumption and resume the expansion of consumption. Therefore, in 2023H2, policies that focus on consumption will be the highlight, and bulk consumption will be the starting point to promote growth in consumption and improve profits in various consumer sectors among A-shares. Of these, pharmaceutical and basic consumer sub-sectors are expected to achieve a rapid growth in profits. As for the technology sector, the digital economy sector may enter a phase where performance will be driven by fundamentals, fuelled by the logic in both policy and technology. Within the digital economy, it is possible to identify domains with both increased orders and excellent performance. Such domains include digital infrastructure, information and innovation where further improvements are expected to be bolstered by policies. Furthermore, with technological changes, companies will accelerate their capital expenditures, and sectors such as artificial intelligence and upstream semiconductors will benefit.
